Important Photography Stages for 1st year

Newborn – 3 months

This is one of the most miraculous times in your child's life. Your new baby will look at you for hours, and prefers seeing your face to anything else, and will begin to grasp onto your finger while gazing into your eyes. This is a perfect age to begin our focus on connections baby plan, enabling us to showcase the intimate relationship developing between mom, dad, and baby. A wonderful story of life unfolds as tiny hands and feet are cradled in larger hands – soft skin contrasting rough, tiny contrasting big, curiosity contrasting pride.

9 months

At almost a year old, babies at this age are increasingly aware of their surroundings. Portraits done at this age can start to incorporate a favorite chair, stuffed animal or blanket. Although they need no help if seated, standing babies at this age usually need to hold onto something. This may be the best time to incorporate a classical color portrait of mother and baby together.

6 months

Halfway through the first year of life is certainly a time to celebrate. Portraits hold time still, though babies do not at this age! Now, exploring their own hands and feet grows into exploring the world around them. Strong enough to sit up, they continue to develop their unique personality and are usually outgoing. Parents should still be included in portraits at this age, even if only as a "prop" in our Fine Art Black and White Relationship Portraiture

12 months

Active could best describe this age! Crawling, walking, or climbing are the challenges. Personalities are becoming more developed and now, baby can throw kisses, wave bye-bye and mimic sounds and gestures. Because of the volatility of this age, a candid approach to a portrait may be the best plan. Either color or black and white portraits would be suitable for this milestone portrait, and should include a family portrait.
